SENATOR CHAMBERS: Okay, but so I won't get lost...

SENATOR COORDSEN: And then that goes back to the land capability groups...

SENATOR CHAMBERS: ...when we...when...

SENATOR COORDSEN: ...within subclasses.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: When we make it an average, it's not based on what any acre actually produces, is it?

SENATOR COORDSEN: Ultimately it should come close, yes.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: But there could be some acres in the subclass that produce more than others.

SENATOR COORDSEN: And that's what the...that is what the weighted average is. You weight...the average of a county, again, is the million bushels, for an example. Some of the acres within the county are more productive and they're ranked like that.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Well, the total would be a million.

SENATOR COORDSEN: Yeah, and so...

SENATOR CHAMBERS: And maybe the top producing acre produces 50 bushels, the bottom producing acre...

SENATOR COORDSEN: Yep.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: ...produces ten.

SENATOR COORDSEN: And...

SENATOR CHAMBERS: So 10 plus 50 is 60 and the average would be 30. Is that right?

SENATOR COORDSEN: Well, it's a little more complicated than
